

Autotrader hides $368,500 — the same defect, a second marketplace

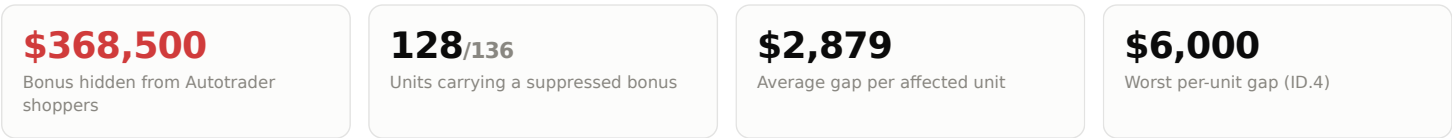

Volkswagen North Scottsdale · Autotrader dealer 46562864 · All prices read live on 27 July 2026

● VERDICT: CONFIRMED — 128 of 136 units affected

Companion audit. This is the Autotrader channel. The cars.com channel was audited separately and found the identical defect on the identical units. The dollar figures differ for a real reason, explained below — not because the two passes disagree.

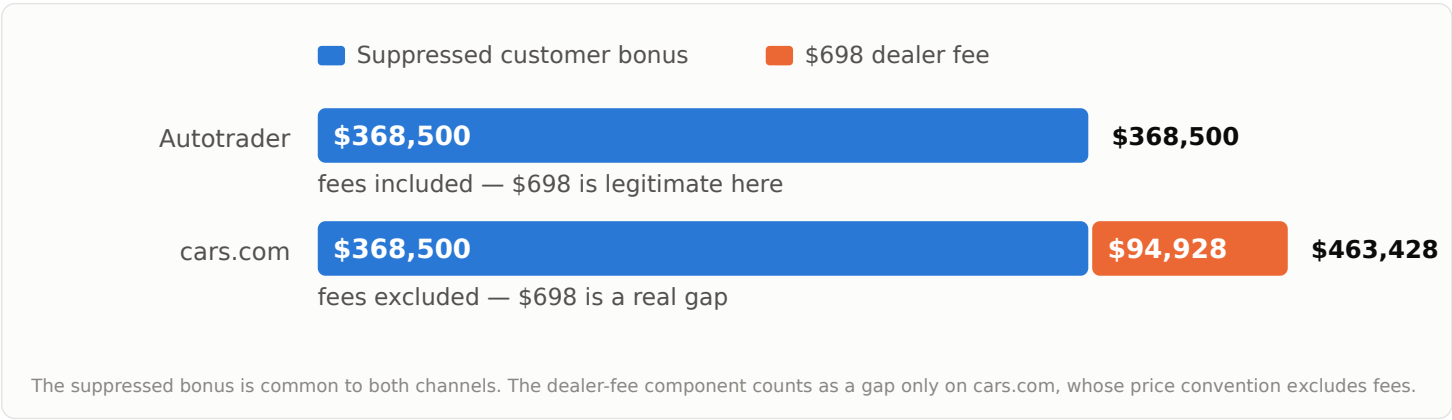

Autotrader publishes our pre-bonus advertised price and never applies the customer bonus. As on cars.com, this is an exact arithmetic identity rather than a sampled inference.

Autotrader price = MSRP – Discount + $698 Dealer Fees
True for 136 of 136 matched units — zero exceptions. The customer bonus is applied on none of them.

Why this number is lower than cars.com's and why that is correct

The cars.com audit reported $463,428. This one reports $368,500. The $94,928 difference is exactly the $698 dealer fee across 136 units — and it is deliberately excluded here. Autotrader displays a “Dealer Fees Included” badge under every price and its price convention includes dealer fees. cars.com's convention excludes them. So the same $698 is a genuine defect on one platform and correct behaviour on the other.

Confirmed, not assumed. Larry H. Miller's comparable Tiguan lists at $35,258 on cars.com and $35,807 on Autotrader — a difference of exactly $549, the documentary fee they disclose on their own site. They exclude it on one platform and include it on the other, matching each platform's convention. Chapman's Autotrader price runs exactly MSRP + $589, their own fee. The fee behaviour is industry-wide; the suppressed bonus is ours.

This channel exposes something cars.com does not. Autotrader prints an MSRP beside the price, and on our listings that number is frequently not the manufacturer's MSRP.

On the 64 units that do carry a discount, the MSRP is correct but the published "Savings" is understated by exactly $698, because the fee is netted against the discount before display. Verified on all 64: $\text{Savings} = \text{Discount} - \698 .

Rank impact

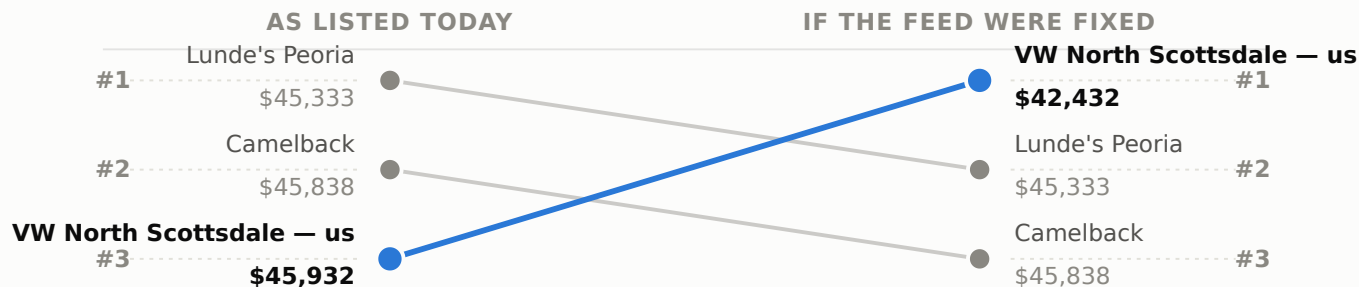

#3 → #1 of 5

Atlas SE w/Technology, FWD

comparable at MSRP $47,834 · 13 of our units

#3 → #1 of 3

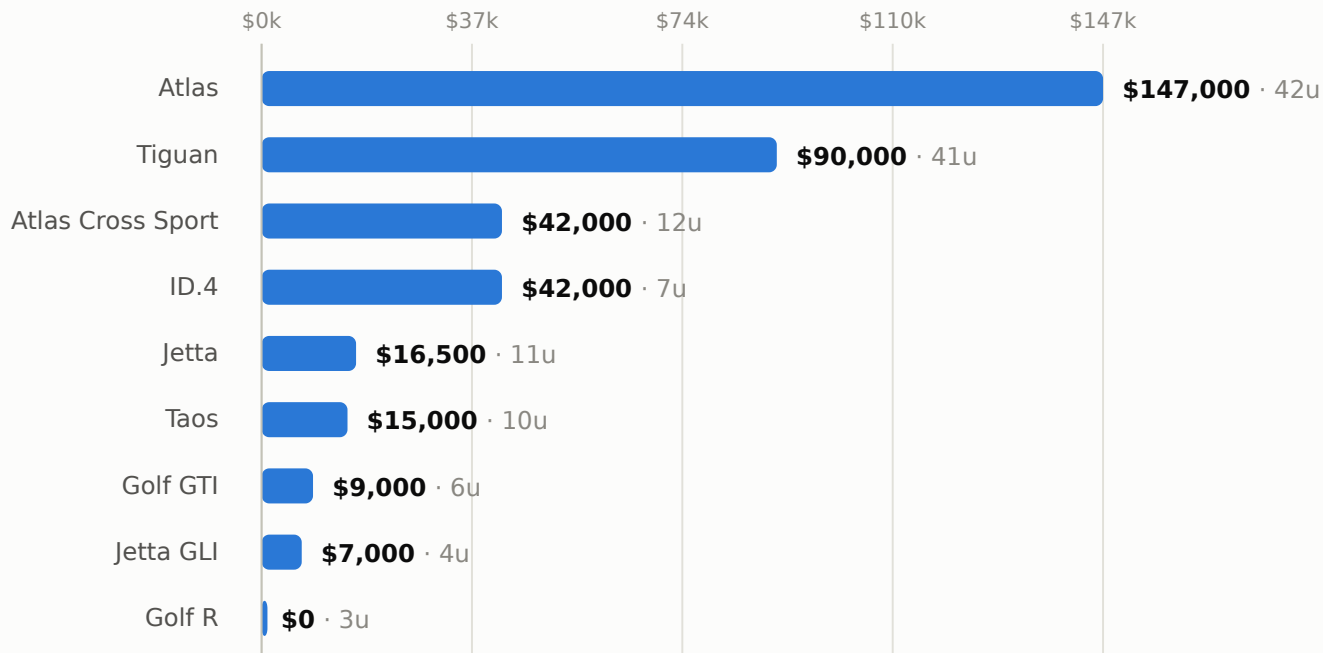

The strongest comparison in the audit: Lunde's comparable unit carries an identical $47,834 MSRP to ours, so the $599 we trail them by is purely the missing bonus. Applying it puts us $2,901 clear of the field.

Sensitivity. Larry Miller and Chapman had no Atlas at this configuration in the returned result set, so this ranking is three-way rather than five-way.

Atlas Cross Sport is missing on purpose. Autotrader has no atlas-cross-sport model slug and the filter fallback returned unfiltered inventory, so competitor prices could not be read at audit quality. Our own 12 Cross Sport units are fully counted in the $368,500; only the competitive comparison is absent. The cars.com pass ranked this model 4th → 3rd, but those are cars.com prices and do not transfer.

Where the money is bonus hidden by model

Suppressed customer bonus summed across each model's affected units. Golf R carries no bonus on any of its 3 units, so it shows no gap.

Priority follows the dollars: Atlas (42 units, $147,000) and Tiguan (41 units, $90,000) are 64% of the total. ID.4 is the highest-value fix per unit — 7 cars at $6,000 of hidden bonus each.

Evidence, and one material limitation

Autotrader publishes no VIN anywhere — not on the search results page and not on the vehicle detail page; both were checked directly. This is the one respect in which this audit is weaker than the cars.com pass, and it cannot be fixed from this access path. The join is by advertised price, corroborated by MSRP and Savings — not by VIN.

- 136 of 137 Autotrader listings match a computed advertised price ($\text{MSRP} - \text{Discount} + \698) from our own live site data, exact to the dollar.
- 97 of those 136 carry a second independent confirmation from Autotrader's own MSRP and Savings values (64 via true MSRP + savings, 33 via the $698 MSRP overstatement).
- The price multiset is identical to cars.com's 136 prices — same units, same numbers, two independent channels and two independent read paths.
- Because MSRP is shared across same-configuration units, this is a unit-level correspondence, not a VIN-level one. For a defect uniform across the whole inventory that does not change the totals, but it is stated rather than glossed.
- One unmatched listing: a Tiguan SE R-Line at $38,073 (listing 781071327) matches no current price on our site. Its price implies a $2,650 discount that no current unit carries — most likely a stale listing. Excluded from every figure here. It is a separate feed-freshness defect, and it runs in the shopper's favour.
- Read-path fragility, controlled: Autotrader's model filter did not apply for competitor dealers, and the page conversion transposed price/MSRP columns on one dealer. Both were caught by requiring $\text{PRICE} = \text{MSRP} - \text{SAVINGS}$ on every competitor row, and re-queried before use.

Recommended fix

The same one-line remap fixes both channels — but they need different fee handling, and a single global change would fix one and break the other.

1. Map the Autotrader price field to the bonus-inclusive lowest price. Recovers the full $368,500.
2. Keep the $698 in the price for Autotrader — but stop folding it into MSRP. The fee belongs in the price under this platform's convention; it does not belong in the MSRP field.
3. Do not apply the cars.com fee fix here. On cars.com the $698 must come out of the price field; on Autotrader it must stay in.
4. Investigate the stale $38,073 listing as a separate feed-freshness issue.

Time sensitivity. The Tiguan Customer Bonus runs 1 July - 31 August 2026. Combined with the cars.com channel, the same 128 units are being advertised above their real price on both major third-party marketplaces simultaneously, inside the window the factory funded the bonus to move them.

Appendix — all 136 matched units

Comparable = (MSRP – Discount – bonus) + $698, retaining the dealer fee per Autotrader's fee-inclusive convention. Gap = Autotrader price – comparable, which equals the suppressed bonus. VINs and stock numbers come from our own site; Autotrader publishes neither.
